Skiing

We found Woody Ridge Mountain Resort to be deep and stable today (surprise surprise, I'll try to find some more interesting obs tomorrow). The wind was whipping at the ridge tops and the eastern side appeared heavily wind affected, but the slabby and loaded-feeling roles in the Central Park/Titanic zone were not reactive to ski cuts and we observed no signs of instability, save for the occasional patch of rotten faceted snow where you'd expect to find it in rocky or densely vegetated areas.
