Took a lap on the skiers left side of the east face of Blackmore. Didn't see any wind slabs or signs of instability. Wind wasn't really ripping too much. Went along the east ridge a bit and dropped some cornices on an east facing slope that drains to Blackmore Cr. Nothing ripped out besides new snow (about 5" of unconsolidated dry pow). The snow on that slope didn't appear to be wind affected either. We did observe weak sugary snow at the ground below the denser snow at the bottom of the pack on high N to E facing slopes.
